We have come a long way in making sure students with disabilities enroll in college, but there is still much work to do. Students with learning disabilities enroll in four-year schools at half the rate as those in the general population, and fewer of them are graduating. While many students enter college unprepared for the demands of college-level work, students with learning disabilities can find that the increased demands, coupled with the lack of structure and support to which they may have been accustomed, can present additional challenges. It is important for families, educators, and involved professionals to know about the changes in disability services at the college level and what supports and skills can help students be successful.

This one-day conference, produced by Let's Talk LD in partnership with the Summit View Schools is being developed to serve several purposes:

- 1) To create an opportunity for students (with learning differences) Grades 11 and 12 (and their parents), to access topical information designed to ease their transition to college;
- 2) To encourage and prepare students (with learning differences) Grades 8-10 (and their parents) to begin the process of strategic college planning, and;
- 3) To create an opportunity for currently enrolled college students (with learning differences) to access topical information and strategies to enhance their college success.

This conference is open to the public. It is our mandate to make this experience available to as many families as possible, the fee to attend is nominal. Scholarships Available.

This year's Conference will reprise the immensely popular and powerful ItldTalks College Transition Student Panel featuring former and current college students with learning differences who will discuss their compelling college transition journeys.

In addition, transition influencers, thought leaders and experts will be sharing their insights about college planning and transition best practices specifically for students with learning differences, their families, and allies.
